In a convention which could not be mistaken for anything else than what it was—a gathering of Democrats—the Bourbon delegates from the Fourth and Fifth districts put a ticket in the field yesterday and last night—mostly last night—a complete ticket with the exception of the county clerk. No one could be found who would accept the nomination for this office, although half a score were named and finally the selection of a candidate was left to the county committee.

The convention was chiefly remarkable for the manner in which Jarrett and his cohorts restored harmony to the party by constant hammering with a baseball bat in the hands of Chairman McCarthy, who, it may be explained, used it as a gavel and not as a weapon, and by two minor compromises made with the Antis which gave two of the opposition nominations for representatives and shut them out in the cold world as far as any other places of value on the ticket were concerned. So disgruntled were the four members of the opposition, headed by Harry Juen, when they found that they were submerged, that they failed to return to the evening session of the convention.

No End to Fight.

This, however, did not mean a cessation of fighting, for the delegates from the Fifth were there, and these poorly organized balloters, with the aid of T. J. Ryan's technical objections, kept the convention running until almost 1 o'clock.

During the afternoon the Fifth in caucus on delegates, behind the scenes, caused the painted canvas in that vicinity to smoke with the heat of arguments but found themselves utterly unable to agree on but one candidate for the house, and that was Jack Kalakieia, the compromise.

Consequently the Fifth District convention in the evening was no Quaker meeting and it was only after much oratory and recriminations, aided by the calm and suave Joe Fern that they at last agreed on a list of candidates. There were very few on the list that were on the original slate put out by the leaders but the delegates seemed satisfied and some of them slept in their seats thereafter with the consciousness of work well done.

The principal fight of the evening was on the senatorial ticket. As provided by the committee on rules, the Fifth was entitled to name one senator and the Fourth two. The Fifth agreed on Curtis Iaukea as their man earlier in the evening, but when the business was reached Mr. Noa Aluli, who declares he is a graduate of Yale, sprang into the arena and attempted to break the slate as agreed upon which was written by Coke, Wirtz and Iaukea filling the positions.

Aluli Did Damage.
Mr. Aluli did much damage, too, with his plausible pleadings and his impassioned denunciations of what he style the "hogish Fourth." He succeeded in getting his name before the convention with the other three and would possibly have been victorious had it not been that steam roller methods on the part of the leaders of the Fourteenth of the Fifth impelled one of the precinct delegation to demand that the Chairman of the Convention poll the precinct before the platform. This was done and behold, four votes appeared for Wirtz where none had grown before.

If Fern had not maintained the unit rule in his precinct, throwing 23 votes to Wirtz where he had but 11 adherents, the Democrats would have lost a candidate whose nomination was not hailed with any cries of joy by such Republicans who were present. Wirtz won by only four votes and Aluli had little to say for the remainder of the evening save to refuse to swallow the nomination for county clerk which had been offered him as a consolation prize.

The supervisory slate went through with a rush, the combatants in the Fifth having grown tired and after that everything was by acclamation, with frequent technical objections by T. J. Ryan, who was apparently willing to stay all night if necessary.

Although the platform and rules committees were ready to report shortly after 2 o'clock, the credentials committee was absent and held the business of the convention at a standstill. It was finally decided to declare a recess and permit the two districts to caucus on their legislative tickets. The fourth district caucus agreed on the following candidates for the house: J. W. Asch, Jr., S. Paxson, C. Almeida, R. Kinslea, G. K. Keawehaku, Archie Robertson.

The fifth district caucus started out in wordy wrangle, which continued all afternoon and ended with the selection of Jack Kalakieia for the house, and no one else. The convention was called to order and the long delayed committee on credentials reported. The report was adopted by acclamation. Chairman Petrie read the report of the rules committee providing for balloting by precincts; that on the senatorial nominations the Fifth should be entitled to one candidate and the Fourth two, and on the supervisors, three from the fifth and four from the fourth. The rules made the temporary officers permanent and provided that the rules of the party should govern.

Uluhi Breaks out.
Jesse Uluhi moved to substitute the secret ballot for the method of voting. This precipitated a debate, M. C. Pacheco holding that the report had to be submitted first to the convention. After further arguing and a number of motions out of place and ignored, it was finally determined by a rising vote that the report be submitted section by section.

When the section calling for voting by precincts was raised, Deputy Sheriff Rose moved that it be adopted. Jesse Uluhi sprang to the front as usual with a motion that the vote be by secret ballot. "You don't want candidates rammed down your throats," he said.

This motion was met with disapproval by several Hawaiian speakers and by T. J. Ryan, who said only Republicans needed the secret ballot and called on the delegates to vote like men for whom they pleased. Uluhi's Last Fight.

Uluhi made an impassioned speech in Hawaiian in which he apparently dealt in personalities, for he brought a number of others to their feet denouncing him, and in the midst of this the call for question was raised, and the advocates of the secret ballot, not more than a score in number, were swept over and engulfed in a wild stampede, which brought out the cry from Harry Juen that the steam roller was in use.

The convention decided to strike out the clause calling for the election of Senators by districts inasmuch as the delegates represent but one senatorial district.

The selections of representatives by districts was approved. The question as to the division of Supervisors as suggested by the rules committee brought out a protest from a member of that committee who had experienced a change of heart after signing the rules.

J. F. Kanio urged that supervisors be nominated without regard to allotment of candidates to districts as suggested. The section was finally adopted as read.

The other sections as read were adopted. Change of Heart.
Jack Kalakieia then mounted the platform and declared that he had seen by the vote on the chairmanship that he should withdraw from the race for the sheriff's nomination and would support the party and stand by the ticket, whatever it should chance to be.

Keawehaku, who had been promised the same thing as Kalakieia, to wit, a place on the legislative ticket if he withdrew his opposition, carried out his promise gracefully and the convention took a recess with harmony apparently knocking at the door.

When the delegates assembled at 8 o'clock for the evening session, the district conventions were called for the selection of candidates for representatives. The Fourth named its caucus selections without a dissenting vote. The Fifth on the other hand wrangled and fought for two solid hours showing that the district is much disorganized and is apparently without anyone who could act as a floor leader.

It finally named what was generally conceded to be a weak ticket composed of the following: Jack Kalakieia, D. Kuphea, J. M. Poepe, J. Kanio, J. K. Paele, E. J. McCandless.

Walter L. Fisher, Governor Frear and Delegate Kuhio on the stage and to get all to speak at the big opening night.

From that time on the campaign will move along well-ordered lines. The county committee decided yesterday that all of its meetings shall be open to the Republican candidates, who shall have a voice in its deliberations but no vote. The committee will have active direction of the campaign, and all of the candidates will be asked to work under this committee, so that none of the individual candidates will go off on tangents of campaigns for themselves. Halls, speakers, campaign support generally will be thoroughly organized.

Joint headquarters for the two committees are to be established, a committee being named to secure a suitable location at once.

The committee named Willard E. Brown, the member from the fourth precinct of the Fourth District, to succeed Albert Waterhouse as treasurer. Mr. Waterhouse, resigning on account of a contemplated business trip that will take him from the Territory.

MUCH PHILIPPINE SUGAR
NOW ON THE MOVE

This has been a lively week along the Muelle, and especially at the sugar godowns, says the Hilo Enterprise of August 25. Five ships are taking 25,000 tons of sugar abroad, and more will arrive in the next few days. This will relieve the bodegas of much of their overstrain, and by putting the sugar on the road to a possible, or sure, in some cases, market, will provide for the future is ease the market is ever resuscitated.

The first of these ships to leave was the Ghaize, which left with 6000 tons for Warner, Barnes & Co., and the Rubi, which took 1200 tons to China for Warner, Barnes & Co. Within the next day or two the Indrago, with clear for W. F. Stevenson & Co. with 5500 tons, and the Mitsuki Maru will take 5,000 tons for Warner, Barnes & Co. to Japan.
